

As the wind brushed against the dark chocolate brown ship, they could see an unfamiliar colossal island as large as the Isle of White. At that moment, the ship started slowing down so they could see the marvellous green and lush island standing right before their very eyes.

Jumping off the boat onto the hard orange sand they could see a giant palm trees standing as straight as a soldier. Colossal rocks marvelled Darwin as they were taller than himself! In this foreign land, there was already so much unfamiliar wildlife.

"Wow! This place is incredible!" Darwin shouted in excitement
"Don't run around you don't know what's out here!" replied Fitzroy.

Looking around, Darwin could not believe his eyes when he saw a giant maroon brown creature flopping around on the beach.

"Fitzroy get over here!" he shouted while examining the animal.

This animal was in fact an adorable gaur seal but little did they know they were in fact aggressive, if you do the wrong thing. The cute fat, chubby seal was eating a red raw salmon by the sandy shoreline. It had a light beige stomach and mouth but the rest was maroon-ish grey; as dark as metal. The flippers were as short as an iPad and as big as a bottle. The marvellous creature was as kind as a capybara.

"What is this?" Darwin questioned.

"That's a Galapagos fur seal!" Replied Fitzroy he said while he was spellbound by the seal's beauty.

At that moment, there was a slight rumble through the red dark sand; that's when they realised that they were on a volcanic island. They started running to the boat as the boiling hot ash darted down from the sky. At last, Darwin and Fitzroy clung themselves onto the ship and they felt safe.

As they boarded the ship, Fitzroy and Darwin were relieved because they felt safe at life but also miserable to say goodbye to the wildlife; however they were excited for the next adventure.
