

Adventure of discovery by Oliver Hall

The vessel anchored as Darwin approached the foreign land. At times, the journey was turbulent they'd endured the stormy weathers of the Atlantic. HMS Beagle swayed as crashing waves struck the ship knocking everybody of their feet. Darwin, who craved the love of animals and their different species, experienced sea sickness every few minutes. With relief, Darwin disembarked the voyage; after an epic journey through stormy skies and distort waters, the journey had finished. As Darwin edged the sandy shoreline of the Brazilian forest, Fitzroy (an inquisitive person) asked a lot of questions about the unfamiliar land and species.

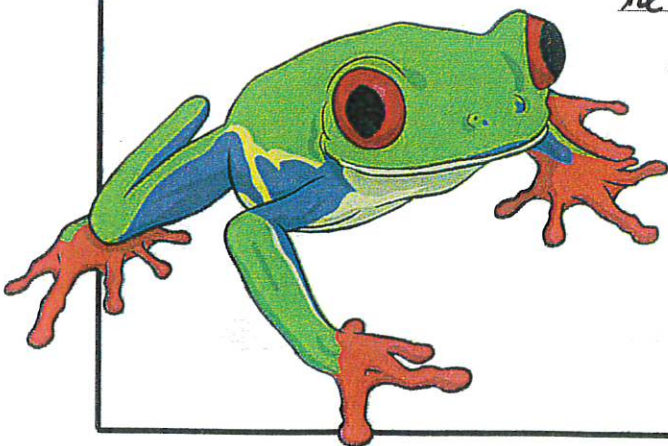

Setting foot upon the foreign land, Darwin sprinted into the forest not caring about Fitzroy, leaving him behind. Tentively, Fitzroy walked into the rainforest carefully checking his surroundings. Dashing further into the forest, Darwin marvelled endlessly at the different species as he entered the densely packed tree part of the maze. A growl radiated the sky — a growl they could almost taste. In a blink of an eye, they dashed to the flow of the noise to discover the unusual growl. "Some kind of animal Charels." Fitzroy asked steadying his feet through the uneven terrain.

"I'm unfamiliar with the noise, old chap, I have a sense of intrigue." replied Darwin "Look! Darwin" he was in ore when he saw the unfathomable creature ⁶⁶ "Welcome to the... Spider or would you want to be called Ctendiae?" ⁹⁹ Darwin excitedly.

The creature stared endlessly as if it was a death stare wanting to eat Darwin up. Its eye widened everyone could see its beady black hole like eyes. Their hairy legs paralyze enemies leaving it to die slowly. Suddenly, evolving trees towered above him turning their day into night; colours of hazel and grey lit up the Ctendiae and sky like millions of fireworks that exploded into the moonlit air. Its venomous insicors which crave into the body of loads of different species of mammals; other Ctendiae/spiders; and various aphibians. ⁶⁶ "Intrestingly" ⁹⁹ Darwin exclaimed ⁶⁶ "this animal has a amber spot on its abdomen." ⁹⁹ ⁶⁶ "Oh I didn't notice that." ⁹⁹ Fitzroy in ore. Amazingly, it pounced faster than the speed of light after its prey.

Darwin, sketchbook in hand, drew the wonderful specie he had discovered and other animals he had catalogued. Darwin pondered he could go on his next travels. Different questions runnig through his head. Why didn't the unfathomable camouflage with the grey soil of the forest? Why didn't it crawl away when it had the chance? Darwin strolled proudly as he went back to the ship to carry on on his voyage of discovery.
